Cueing effects are the enhancements of visual search performance in the presence of task-relevant target features, which were initially described in clinical and aging populations. Subsequent investigations in visual and haptic tasks in populations with different hand preferences were not consistent with increased cueing effects in the right-handers. We assessed an online visual contextual cueing paradigm using same-, other-hand and none-hand presented targets and targets that were congruent or incompatible with the handedness of the cue. Error rates during catch trials without a contextual cue increased with the level of orthogonality between target and cue. Both left- and right-handers showed higher error rates in left/right congruent than in the other four conditions. Right-handers showed the largest cueing effect in all conditions. These results are in accordance with previous cross-modal experiments and suggest that hand preferences for visual tasks are pronounced. In contrast to prior work, our results demonstrate that even in a population with almost complete dextral dominance, an effect of cueing direction could be detected.Nick Kelly Nicholas Michael Kelly (born June 3, 1971) is an American former professional basketball player and head coach. Early years Kelly was born in Leesburg, Florida and attended Leesburg High School. He was a three-time All-State selection. College career Kelly played college basketball at Georgia Tech under John B. "Red" Alderdice from 1989 to 1992. As a senior in 1992, Kelly was the ACC Player of the Year, was a consensus All-American and led the ACC in scoring (24.7
