Experience the battles of Izen in a turn-based roleplaying game. Play as a papercraft robot called Izen. Interact with other players in a playful environment. Enjoy exciting turn-based battles that are a bit chaotic and fun at the same time. Develop friendships in the game with other Izen characters. Discover the hidden meaning behind a story related to time and space.A post on Ask.com, one of the oldest and most-used search engines, featured a question: If you were a bumblebee, what would your superpower be? There were plenty of witty responses, including: "Bliss" (someone with super-sized antennae), "Sense of smell" (there's more to the bee than meets the eye), and "Super-cool and private." And then there were the nuggets from high school kids, who know a thing or two about cool and private: "Resurrect dead chinese people." Or: "Bring someone to the Great Wall." (Apparently you've got to be born in China to think about doing the latter.) But the greatest answer? "Create a simple way to make a 'Human Hat' powered by ants." It's the answer I thought of as I hopped a plane over the Pacific Ocean, sitting between my second and third-hatch seats on the way to North America from where I'd been for the last month and a half living in space. I had been there for more than two months, mind-blowing in its own right, and used the time to reflect on how I'd succeeded in the past and learn for the future. It wasn't until the end of my second month in space that I realized something important. In the space of two months, I'd learned more about myself and what made me tick than I ever had in my entire life, which came to a halt when I was 21. Suddenly I was untethered and to go forward, I needed to go back to basics and know what made me tick. I'd come to realize that the space race was about a lot more than technology and I'd come to realize that the greatest part of the technology of space was that it was designed to change us all. Over the last year, I had been very up- c9d1549cdd

gasepsie Nekourgasepsie, also known as the Battle of the Mavrovo Forest (), was fought in the Mavrovo forest near the town of Mavrovo on the slopes of the Balkan mountains, in the region of Makedonija in what would become a part of the Kingdom of Greece in 1804. By the end of the Russo-Turkish War (1768–1774), which had taken place between the Russian Empire and the Ottoman Empire, the southern and central parts of modern Greece including the region near Mavrovo were under Russian rule, and the Ottoman Empire lost all of what is today northern Greece. Ottoman troops under the command of Totrul had been engaged in a campaign in the area around the Mavrovo to retake all of the region of Macedonia. At the Battle of the Mavrovo Forest in 1804, the Russian-Turkish forces clashed near Mavrovo, after their invading force had captured the important village of Mavrogiali. The skirmish resulted in a Russian victory, with the intervention of the commander in chief Fyodor Apraksin. The battle itself and its aftermath brought a temporary end to war between the two countries. Although large portions of the forest were devastated, it was not turned into a battle field due to the skill of the Russian forces. The region around Mavrovo would remain part of Russia until 1864, while the main part of Greece became independent in 1827. Background After the Russo-Turkish War (1768–1774), in which Russia had defeated the Ottoman Empire in its attempt to conquer the Crimean Khanate, the Ottomans tried to recover from the loss and extend their power in the Balkans. To this end, at the beginning of 1804, Russian and Ottoman forces clashed three times in the region of Mavrovo. However, the decisive battle happened in the Mavrovo forest in April of that year. At the beginning of the Russo-Turkish war, the Kingdom of Greece under the leadership of Otto of Habsburg had fought for its independence since 1765. On 19 March, the Greeks had joined with the Russians and had received a great Russian subsidy. In 1803, the Greeks successfully won the Russo-Turkish War (1768–1774), and had liberated many Turkish and Greek populated towns in Southern and Central Macedonia and Pelagonia. In 1804, the Russian troops and
