Simple keygen is an open source application that can be downloaded on the Q. How to bind a component to the DOM using useEffect()? I'm writing a small application. In it I have two components: a Counter component and a grid component. The counter component is responsible for wrapping the grid component within it when it's too big. Here is the code: `const Counter = () => { const [grid, setGrid] = useState([ { id: '1', height: 20 }, { id: '2', height: 30 }, { id: '3', height: 40 } ]); useEffect(() => { if(grid.length > 10) { setGrid(grid.slice(0, 10).concat([ { id: '4', height: 50 }, { id: '5', height: 60 }, { id: '6', height: 70 } ])); } return () => {}; }, [grid]); return ( < %s Height: {grid.map(({ height }) => height)} {grid} ); ); The counter component gets called like this: Now, when I call useEffect() on the counter component, the grid component does not get re-rendered when the counter component is re-rendered. What I'm trying to accomplish is, whenever the counter component is re-rendered, the grid component should re-render as well, so that the counter component no longer wraps the grid component. A: You need to render your grid component inside your Counter component otherwise useEffect won't be re-run when the Counter component re-renders. {grid}`

Wlingua App. 2.0.0.Q: In C#, if no overload for a method is found, is it possible to force a compile error? When compiling a program, I prefer when the compiler can find an overload for a method, so that it is possible to know what code is being called. Sometimes, no overload is found for the method, and the compiler fails with, "No overload for..." (or similar). But in other cases I would like the compiler to find an overload for a method, and display an error at compile time if it doesn't. If there is no overload, it would be useful to write a tiny test program that fails to compile, to demonstrate how it should be written. How can I do this? For example, in the following code, it is quite annoying to misspell the method parameter, because I don't get any error. So I would like it to find a method for
