In Tekken 7: Fated Retribution, human kind is on the brink of extinction. The entire world has been reduced to rubble, forcing a survivors' exodus to the relative safety of the stratosphere. But someone has forgotten to mention the dead. As the waters of the world begin to rise, the human race has no choice but to regroup and find a way to survive on the floating continents below. As the fight for survival commences, the new cast of characters reveal a different side to these formerly peaceful people. While many choose the path of pacifism, others are committed to the new struggle for power. Humanity's survival is at stake! Zombies are attacking, and some more have been infected with the Zombie Flu - a virus that can be killed by burning everything in the vicinity. Now that the weather has turned mild again, all nearby zombies have been attracted to the warmth of the outside and are prowling in the daylight to feast on the living. As the number of zombies grows, the number of living survivors grows correspondingly. The only thing more important to a survivor than avoiding the zombies is staying alive, and there are only so many things to do with only so many bullets and so much time. To better motivate her troops, the Mayor gives the race its own public announcement system, broadcasting all races only to city-dwellers. Prizes are also common in all races, so winning a race is still a great way to earn some loot and bragging rights. With the Zombie Flu spreading across the nation, different races will be available and available at a different time of the year. What's new:

(The X-Files) "Backfire" is the twenty-fifth and final episode of the sixth season of the television series The X-Files. The episode first aired on April 28, 1999 on the Fox network, and was written by executive producer Frank Spotnitz, and directed by Kim Manners. The episode, along with the season finale, "Trust No 1", are significant because they both resolve cliffhangers from the previous season, and "Backfire" features three appearances by the series' recurring character Monica Reyes (Annabeth Gish). The Fox network commissioned five episodes of The X-Files during season six, and "Backfire" was the first episode of any of these five installments. The episode received largely positive reviews from critics upon its initial broadcast, but was criticized by some fans and biographers for neglecting the show's season five storylines. "Backfire" was viewed by approximately 10.8 million viewers, which was a sharp increase from the previous week's episode, "The X-Files: What They Died For" and set a record for the highest-rated mid-season premiere in the show's history. "Backfire" won the Primetime Emmy Award for Outstanding Animated Program (for Programming Less Than One Hour). Plot A cargo plane carrying a mysterious cargo is shot down over the ocean, and killed along with the rest of the passengers. In the cargo hold is an unidentified corpse, which is quickly scooped up and towed to a U.S. Navy vessel. A corvette from the Navy investigates the cargo hold and discovers bones and a second corpse. The rest of the wreckage and second corpse are saved for the team to examine, which turns out to be little more than a cadaver of a man carrying some of the victim's blood; also found are a tattered flag, a Bible and a half-filled bottle of J&B Scotch. The rest of the corpses have flesh stripped from their bodies, but when he is probed, the abdomen reacts with any examination. Nevertheless, it is revealed that the second corpse is intact, to the surprise of the remaining four, and that the last observed survivor of the crash was a man who entered the cadaver's dead body and left via the abdominal opening. Dr. Stanton had earlier checked the livers, trying to see if the corpses had any trace of the alien infection, and has since discovered he was only looking at a stump
