There are over 1,000 animations in the game, with players moving around almost 70,000 individual joints and using over 900 animations within them. In addition, each player has 6 reaction animations, giving them a wide range of pre-scripted actions that happen before real-life players have the ball. Along with the addition of these new animations and sequences, EA will use data-driven AI to make decisions on where a player's next pass should come from and which passing options are available.

Plus, players have up to five different techniques from which to choose, before taking their next action. With this new technology, the decisions and actions of the player are now more realistic. This includes the way they go down and tackle opponents, as well as how they attempt to win the ball back from an opponent. This is presented through four distinct dive types. In addition to the above, there are also 67 environments in the game, with customizable stadiums, goalposts and light refraction. Plus, stadiums can be customized with flags on the field, with over 100 possible combinations. To help increase the variety of gameplay, the midfield will also be revamped, with the introduction of a new, dynamic through pass system. This is used to create more variable angles of attack through the middle of the pitch, including through triple passes. As an "E-Sports" feature, "Motion Arena" mode will be supported. This mode allows FIFA players to see their match in real-time in a stadium-like environment, including pitch-side cameras and a full audience, in which the 3D stadium is animated to replicate real-world crowds. Another new feature is "Direct Kick," which allows users to take a shot directly from any position on the field. You can even have a player from beyond the box take the shot. The more successful the shot, the greater the reward you receive.
