A: Downloading and installing software illegally is not supported and you can face legal consequences for it. As long as you don't upload the crack to pirate sites the license agreement has nothing to do with it. Q: Querying an Oracle database with SqlNet - Azure SQL Database I'm currently using SqlNet in.NET 4.6 in order to connect to a SQL Server, and am trying to move to an Azure SQL Database, a load balancer to an AWS RDS Database and an IaaS VM using IIS based on an Azure VM. I keep receiving the following error message. Trouble running SQL query - Unable to retrieve connection from the ADO.NET provider. I've been able to query a SQL Server with the same data type for a very long time using SqlNet and have a SqlConnection I am using elsewhere in my code successfully. If I go into Azure, edit the properties of the connection, specify the Server name and then click on the Test Connection button I can be connected. If I copy the connection string and paste it into another C# program it will connect successfully. If I past the connection string into a.Net script file and open it using Notepad++ it will connect successfully. Basically, I'm hoping there is someone that has already gone through this process and can help me set the connection string in order to have it connect using SqlNet. I'm using an oracle 11g r2 database if that's relevant. A: Well, the answer was not exactly what I was hoping for but I was able to find an old reference post on Microsoft's website for Oracle, Azure, RDS, and SQL Server. The answer I was looking for may have been slightly out of date, but the information I was able to get from it may be of use to others. Here is the connection string I was able to work with, hope this helps someone else. // SQL Server string connectionString =
