This game has three campaigns. Each of the campaigns play out the same basic scenarios differently, but all three contain different elements of the same gameplay. Campaign 1: Basically, you're meant to be on the spaceship of the Great Wall. And other ships that are kind of at war. And it's all kind of an adventure. All of the different Great Wall ships and all of the different pirate ships and all of the different resources that you're going to be finding. And hopefully, you're going to find that first big thing that completes your ship and you can break the Great Wall. Campaign 2: The other campaign is a bit similar to the first one, but it's a bit more of a settling out phase of what you've done before, and you have some choices to make with which you go to the next phase of the story. So the planet that you're on is kind of torn apart. So you have an opportunity to really make it a great planet, with all of your resources. And you can either skip through the middle and go straight to the alien planet or you can go see what the planet has to offer and then turn around and go to the alien planet. Campaign 3: And then the third campaign is something that I hope is very different for all of you players. The third campaign allows you to have allies. And so you're actually allied with different ships. You can come up and help other people, and also find that same kind of goal in that you're allied with people who are in the same race as you. We wanted to give a new experience for the way players think about the game and the universe of the game. So the big issue that we had, was that people were really kind of using real estate management and that's a very land-based economy. And so really kind of landlocked players weren't using their ships. We wanted them to be more - if you will - "freelancers". We wanted to create an economy where people were taking contracts, taking orders, and using their ships to deliver things. The way you do that is you have a "skybox" that you use to establish that you're looking at. And that's important when you're using your ships. Because the - so when you look at

The contribution of nitrate, phosphate and ammonium to the nitrogen and phosphorus supplied to the white lupin (Lupinus albus L.) seedlings grown in microplots is examined. In one treatment, nitrate and ammonium were supplied together in the form of nitrate and ammonium nitrate, or alternatively as nitrate and NH4+SO4 at a concentration of 2 mM together with ammonium sulfate at a concentration of 5 mM. After 7 days of treatment, these microplots were divided in two subplots, each subplot was supplied with nutrients individually or simultaneously, and uptake was measured at the end of the treatment. This microplot experiment was repeated three times. The results obtained show that nitrate uptake was not significantly affected by the two nitrate supply strategies. Nitrate was taken up simultaneously with ammonium-inorganic fertilizer at a rate of about 10% of the applied fertilizer. However, it was not taken up simultaneously with other nutrient forms. Phosphorus taken up as P was: (1) less effectively taken up than as P2O5; (2) more effectively taken up simultaneously with fertilizer as N than as PO4; (3) more effectively taken up simultaneously with fertilizer as PO4 than as NH4 + PO4. Ammonium taken up was:
