Moreover, you're not limited to creating a single file per operation, with a dedicated value field to configure output quantity. The name can be random, or configured by writing in a dedicated field. A few common extensions can be selected from a drop-down menu, but you're free to specify an extension of interest. Content can be readable, and this is done by filling in the content text field. Manually editing content grays out the possibility to specify output size. If content is random, size is specified in a dedicated field, but be careful, because values are in bytes, with no option to select a different unit. Advanced users can also add custom variables.
