FreelHealth-related Quality of Life in Women With Anterior Segment Dysfunction: Results From the Hormone Therapy in the Treatment of Eye Disease (HTAUD) Study. To assess the effect of tibolone versus placebo on health-related quality of life in women with newly diagnosed anterior segment disease. This was a 2-year, multicenter, randomized, parallel-group, double-masked study performed in 28 centers in The Netherlands and Belgium. Women (n = 404) with newly diagnosed macular edema or cataract caused by an anterior segment disease were randomized to treatment with a 0.625-mg once-a-day formulation of tibolone or placebo for 1 year. Health-related quality of life was evaluated at baseline and after 6, 12, and 24 months of treatment using the Short Form 36 Health Survey, the EuroQol, and the Rand-36. At 12 months, the primary efficacy variable, anterior chamber cell grade, was improved in both the tibolone (mean \pm standard deviation [SD], 0.7 \pm 0.9) and placebo (mean \pm SD, 0.8 \pm 0.9) groups (P = 0.008). Anterior chamber flare increased in the tibolone group (from 6 months onward), whereas a decrease was observed in the placebo group. After 12 months of treatment, the proportions of women who had recovered to the level of their previous health status were higher in the tibolone group than in the placebo group for all eight Short Form 36 Health Survey subscales (P Q: redirecting to a php script from javascript)
