Download Now .Q: Trouble with multithreading and Boost.Python I'm new to boost.python and I'm working with a TBB application. It was written without threading (and it's still working) and I would like to add multithreading support. I am trying to wrap a function and call it from several threads, however: My python function can't access the object that I'm trying to wrap because it's being destroyed while the wrapping is in progress. With some variables declared and reused in the python function by a boost.python.invoke I get segmentation fault. Here's some example code : // this wrapper allows my python function to access the object struct wrap { boost::python::object obj; wrap() {obj = boost::python::object(this);} ~wrap() {boost::python::object().attr("__dict__") = obj; obj=object();} void do_something(py::object &pt) { python
