In the case of most of the cameras in the same series, high ISO sensitivity in a range of 1000 to 16,000, allowing the capture of up to ten times the subject brightness in black and white or allows you to take a photo in 10 times the brightness in color. It allows you to make wonderful images never-before used, for example, a compact camera or digital camera. With the design of the new lens system, full image through the entire range of f/15. However, another very important element is the realization of Ek Sensor of the new camera. And the fact that the lens is thinner, simply a full-spectrum, allowing you to see more clearly the colours and detail of the subject. Determined to make the best camera. EK will continue to develop technological progress with the camera to fulfill the promise of the price level. This promise is not only fulfilled but exceeds the low level as well as the price of EK Ek Sensor. That year, the film had a strong national release in India in January 2013. Fox announced a sequel in late 2013, after the low-rated reception of the first film, and originally planned a release date in February 2015. The project was rushed into production in the wake of the Frozen success and the release was pushed forward two years to 2013. Many of the original film's producers and writers returned to work on the sequel, including John Lasseter, Nancy Lee and Chris Buck. After creating a 1001-day story board for the sequel, Lasseter was promoted to chief creative officer in May 2013. In November 2013, Lee and Roy Lee of Walt Disney Animation Studios joined the film as co-directors, marking the first time that a film in the studio's history had co-directors. The film's soundtrack, Frozen, was released in November and won for Best Original Song at the 85th Academy Awards. In the weeks leading up to the release of the film, Disney released several television spots, including a Summer Olympic-inspired version of the song "Do You Want to Build a Snowman?", sung by Demi Lovato. Frozen 2 was released
