Data security is a primary concern for individuals and organizations that seek to protect their own data. Many devices that store data may be part of a network in which the device may be accessed by a variety of users. For example, a user may access a storage device attached to a desktop computer through a network, such as a Local Area Network (LAN), Wide Area Network (WAN), the Internet, or the like. The storage device may contain data or applications that the user would prefer not be compromised. One possible way to protect the data stored on the storage device may be to encrypt the data. Encryption may cause the data to be unintelligible to anyone without the correct pass code. For example, data stored in the storage device may be encrypted using a Master Key that only a particular user may know. The Master Key may be used to encrypt data and may only be decrypted by the user using a decryption key, which may be stored on the storage device. Many data storage devices may include a storage enclosure with access doors that open when the storage enclosure is not being used. For example, the access doors may open when the storage enclosure is being moved. The access doors may provide access to an internal storage device to which an external interface device may be connected. The data storage device may maintain the Master Key to allow only authorized access by the external interface device connected to the storage device. However, such data storage devices may require a user to remove the enclosure from the user's device and manually lock the enclosure during times when data is not being transmitted to or from the data storage device. Further, such data storage devices may require a user to remove the external interface device connected to the enclosure when the enclosure is locked to prevent unauthorized access to the data stored on the data storage device. Q: How to use input type file in Rails 4 I'm trying to figure out how to use the input type "file" in Rails 4. I've added the following lines to my form: However, when I submit the form, this error is raised: undefined method `model_name' for # Is there a way to assign the value to a variable so I can process it later? A: You need to pass a model object to the input_field helper. If you do want to assign the value to a variable, you can use the :method option and assign the value to a ruby variable: Personally, I find the resourceful way of adding file upload fields to a form is to add a :json attribute to the form, and then using a post action to set the appropriate variables. In your case, that would look like: In your form_for, you could use: and then in your controller: def create @model = Model.new(params[:model]) if @model.save respond_with @model, status: :created, location: @model else respond_with @model.errors, status: :unprocessable_entity end end Update: To address the comment below, it may be useful to know that Rails supports multiple formatters for single values. So, for example, if you have a string attribute, you can use both text_field and string_field to create two different input fields with different formatting. Rails would take care of switching the formatters properly between the two. A: You need to have a model
