A 34-year-old woman who presented with almost complete weight loss and musculoskeletal symptoms. She was diagnosed with achalasia, and treatment with botulinum toxin type A resulted in progressive weight gain. There were additional musculoskeletal manifestations and diffuse, bilateral swelling in the retroperitoneum, mainly at the level of the psoas muscles. Based on the clinical presentation, imaging studies, physical examination, and laboratory analysis, celiac disease was initially suspected, but celiac serology was negative. Biopsies of the retroperitoneal tissue and lymph nodes were interpreted as inflammation-associated hyperplasia. The patient initially showed weight loss, and after this the symptoms were ascribed to celiac disease. The patient later became severely ill with weight loss and musculoskeletal symptoms. Further analysis revealed an inactivating mutation in the aryl-hydrocarbon receptor, a key component of the aryl hydrocarbon receptor signaling pathway. This condition can be regarded as an example of a disease with combined immunologic, metabolic, and endocrinologic features.Q: CodeIgniter Date Formatter Hey guys, I'm using CodeIgniter 1.7.3 and I'm writing a form for users to input a date.
