We have updated our server chat and support pages: Q: MongoDB PHP with CouchDB In an application I develop, some user entered data are stored in a MongoDB database, and user entered data are stored in a CouchDB database. The two databases contain the same user (I can know the id of the user in both databases). Now I need to show a message to the user when user entered data are stored in the CouchDB database and not in the MongoDB database. How can I know if data are stored in the CouchDB database or MongoDB database in a specific user? A: If you use mongo-php-adapter with db class you can catch $collection->find('id','user') query for MongoDB collection and $doc['id_couch'] for CouchDB. example: $collection = MongoDB\Manager::db('n')->collection('users'); $doc = $collection->find('id','user'); if ($doc->id == 'id_user_from_couchdb') { echo 'Wrong document id'; } Party roles in adolescence: influence of parents and school context. Although parents' involvement in youth development has been a recurring theme in research since the early 1900s, it has not been clear what characteristics of parents and of the school environment are influential. In this study, the authors tested the influence of parents' involvement and school context by comparing the peer and family relations and levels of autonomy and exploration of children from families where one or two parents were active in adolescent development with the same children's peers and siblings from families where neither parent was active. The analyses indicated that adolescents from families where either parent was actively involved performed more autonomy and exploration and had more positive peer relations than did adolescents
