The difference between the two is that the features that Elements includes are similar to those found in Windows Movie Maker (described in Chapter 16). CS, on the other hand, has advanced features similar to those found in Adobe's top-selling software, InDesign. However, that version of Photoshop Elements, the first version, was nowhere near as robust as the version known as Photoshop Elements 5. Many of the newer features found in Elements 6.0 have been present for some time in Elements 5.0, and some of the tools found in Elements 6.0 were also present in the same tool in Elements 5.0. 5. PSE Photoshop is for graphic designers, and as an alternative to Photoshop. The main limitation is that it only supports the RGB color space, which makes it incompatible with most image files, even the ones that contain 8-bit grayscale (256 colors) color values. Due to the switch from Macromedia's Synchronized Document Format (SDF) to the more open Portable Document Format (PDF) in 2016, Adobe also abandoned the use of the Macintosh File System (MFS) and the Mac OS system and associated toolbox, which is necessary for many advanced features of the application (the large file size was also a serious drawback). PSE Photoshop can be used as a stand-alone application or a plug-in to Adobe Bridge, but is not as powerful as Photoshop or Photoshop Elements. Molecular imaging holds the promise of improved pre-clinical tumor response prediction, toxicology investigations, and personalized medicine. The application of tumor choline and its catabolite, betaine, has been extensively investigated for their potential as biomarkers of cancer aggressiveness. However, with many different analytical techniques, complex procedures, and multiple steps between tumor sample acquisition and data acquisition, the promise of this approach has not been fully realized. In the era of precision medicine, there is a definite need to simplify the molecular imaging process and to find novel biomarkers that are reflective of pathology in a fast, accurate, and non

Jay-Z has offered a solution to the country's infrastructure crisis — installing WiFi in the Lincoln and Holland tunnels. The rapper, whose real name is Shawn Carter, will fund the $3 million project, which he believes will bring economic benefit to New York City's largest metropolis. "I've said since I was a kid that I hate commuting," he said at a news conference announcing the project. The tunnels between Manhattan and New Jersey are among the most congested areas in the world, he added. "I can't imagine the amount of people that pass through those two tunnels each day," he said. ADVERTISEMENT "Those two tunnels are probably the worst place to put a fast internet connection that I can think of." The announcement was made on Monday as part of the Jay-Z-run venture called 30 Roc - Landmarks, a company that invests in green businesses. Tunnel-goers can get a WiFi hotspot in the water pipes as they travel from Chelsea to the meat packing district in Newark. He described the idea as a "more convenient way to get connected" and "put their down time to good use." New York City's mayor, Michael Bloomberg, is also on board and one of the company's 20 partners include city utility ConEd. The project will run for five years and funded through a separate New York City-based venture. ADVERTISEMENT It will be a partnership between Roc co-founder Jay-Z, his marketing business Roc Nation and McDonald's. "McDonald's" is one of the 30 Roc businesses. ConEd is the same utility that installed last month's nationwide $200 million wireless broadband project funded by Sprint's parent company.Engineered antisense peptides specific for the delivery of a cancer therapeutics. Antisense oligonucleotides offer a promising new treatment strategy for the development of therapeutic agents directed against tumor-associated genes. Several peptides have been engineered for delivery of antisense oligonucleotides to cells. These peptides are capable of directly transferring a nucleic acid to the cell and have the additional advantage of entering cells via coated vesicles that undergo membrane fusion with the cell surface. These peptides are targeted for nucleic acid delivery via modification of the primary sequence for the ultimate generation of soluble and nontoxic peptide-nucleic acid conjugates that can transfect cells with minimal cytot
