I believe these are all gonna need some sort of lawyer to deal with. Using Vim as Hex editor A: Licensing issues aside, if you're going to use GPL software, you can't use a serial number to activate it. The GPL specifically mentions that the license is to be given out to people that have difficulty opening the software. Basically, it's a way of bypassing the copyright law and getting a free license. However, this bypass is not without restrictions. You can't just give a computer to someone, and tell them to "open the file". It has to be done by the person in question. This has been clarified in the GPL FAQ: Q: I have a person in my family who needs a copy of my program. We will split the program so that I can give him the copy I need, and he keeps the original. What license should I use? A: You can give a CD, DVD, or USB stick with the program. You can also provide your program on a web site. However, you must place a copy of the GNU General Public License and a notice to that effect in the root directory of your program. Further, you must explicitly say that the program is not covered by the GNU General Public License. There is a simple way to do this. Pick a CD-size envelope, and put this notice into it. When your friend opens this envelope he will be asked if he wants to accept your terms. If he wants to accept your terms, and the program is for him, you can give him the CD. If not, take the envelope and return it to you. Source: Hospital administrators are increasingly challenged to implement high-performance patient safety, especially during the development and implementation of new and revised policies and procedures. A joint research project (HR-10-01) of the Society for Hospital Epidemiology of America (SHEA) and the National Quality Forum (NQF) is designed to provide the applied research necessary to facilitate the translation of patient safety evidence into hospital policy and procedures. To ensure that the research will be highly relevant to health care institutions of all types and sizes, we will use a staged-integrated-translational research approach
