New York's plan to transition its Medicaid program to managed care provides an opportunity for hospitals to provide services in a more efficient and effective way for Medicaid beneficiaries. However, the plan may limit access to care for Medicaid beneficiaries unless hospitals fully understand and comply with state regulations. This article provides recommendations for health care providers and hospitals to avoid penalties for noncompliance and to ensure that the services they provide are consistent with Medicaid regulations. Dopamine D1-like receptor stimulation enhances, while D2-like receptor stimulation inhibits, the potassium conductance in substantia nigra neurons. Dopamine D1-like receptors (D1Rs) and D2-like receptors (D2Rs) co-localize in the basal ganglia and the neurotransmitter dopamine

Sometimes you should work with what you have, then you're forced to take what you earn. For me, this happened slowly. I made my way up to the top in the first few years, and then saw no more new recruits come down or up. Six years have passed, and I have my first sous chef, Farley. He's an interesting fellow. I eventually hire three more sous chefs, David, Jake, and Nick. These four men are about equal, and by the end of my tenure I have more money and more prestige than I did at the beginning. By this time it's obvious that not only have I experienced my first chef-run restaurant, but I've experienced a chef-run restaurant in New York City. I keep my NYC restaurant open for a year, but make some changes, namely, I cut myself in half and make two restaurants. The benefit? That means if one falls, I still have one. People now have options as to where they can take their dinner. Furthermore, as the former chef-run New York restaurant has now been sold, I can do things such as pad the menu to ensure that I don't run out of anything. I find great pleasure in this--the culinary equivalent of a security blanket. The lesson I've learned over the years? To hire smart people. The next thing I hire is an assistant. This person is more akin to a butler, answering the phones, cleaning the kitchen, making sure the servers don't have a breakdown. It isn't like that before--there are no phones, no running water, and no plants. When my restaurant opened, it came as a complete surprise to me. I know I've earned the money I've made in the last few years and certainly have the capital to run a more proper restaurant. But I'm still a fool. I make the mistake of talking myself out of the chef apron. Farley and I have lunch at Houston's in New
