Q: Passing data from console app to windows service I have a console app that will need to open a file in the Windows System directory. I would like this file to be modified by a windows service. I know that Windows will prompt the user to allow the windows service to create the file, but I would like the user to be able to modify this file without having to restart the windows service. My issue is that the file needs to be opened with a specific application. Is there a way to pass this information to the windows service, or is there a better way to do this? Thanks! A: If it's a.Net assembly, you can use a custom configuration file so the user doesn't have to log on. Your service can read this configuration file and see what program to run. You could make it fairly easy to manage with a database and update the config file when the service starts up. Q: SQL Server Replace Function with Select Statement In SQL Server, I have a row that consists of a relatively large number of columns. I would like to replace a column with a stored procedure. The stored procedure would be a stored function that does a select statement. Is there any way to get this to work? Reason for the requirements: Its a WebKit architecture of businesses, where the first application is a client application. It is developed in a well (forgive the use of the word) "standard" way but needs to be extendable in the future. As such, the database would grow and grow. Since there will be many of these clients, the idea is to keep as much logic as possible out of the database. A: SQL Server supports a few functions for resolving polymorphic queries - Functions, Scalar-valued Functions, Table-Valued Functions, Split String Functions, and XML Helper Functions. If your case is a Table-Valued Function that returns a result set, you should try to write it using this option. Retailers are investing in technology and data to predict shopper's tastes. But shopper predictions are limited to the data available on products in their stores. Most handheld apps offer predictions of what people will like or buy based on people's past behavior. Companies like Zwift, which is sold at Walmart, or Carbon, which is sold at Target, build up predictors of products for the Early diagnosis followed by prompt intervention is essential for a successful outcome. An appropriate antifungal regime is the key to effective treatment.Q: if X

I proved that they are independent in a), so I don't know what to do with b). A: Hint: For X and Y independent, it is true that $$P(A\cap B)=P(A)\cdot P(B)$$ for any two events A and B.
