LACHTHERMERIK, Netherlands (AP) — Residents of a Dutch town have been protesting because they say a soccer team became too successful too fast. Residents of Lechtstroom said Thursday they were frustrated about the development of the town's soccer club, H.S.V.

Stormvogels in nearby Valkenswaard. The team's name is derived from a 19th-century farmer's family name, which in turn translates into "birds of steel."

Stormvogels came second in the Dutch soccer league last season and is hoping to win the national title this year. But residents say the team's plans for a new stadium are creating a flood of development in the town, and that plans to expand the stadium aren't being adequately screened by the local planning authority.
